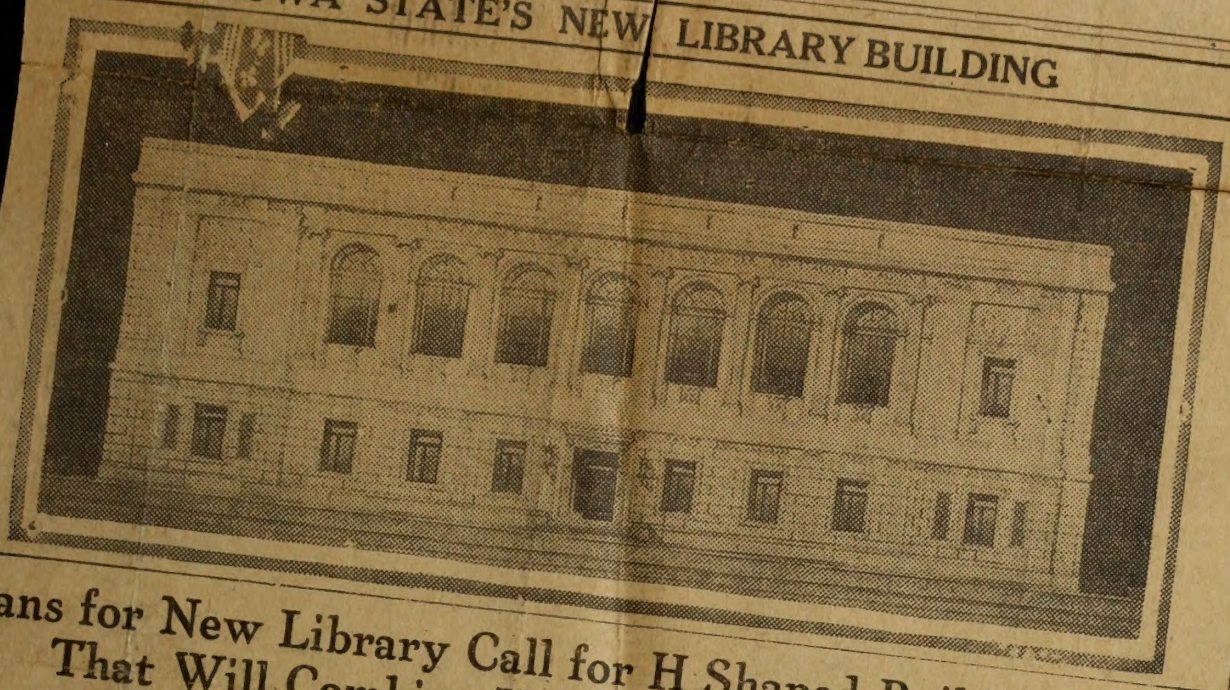
IOWA STATE'S NEW LIBRARY BUILDING



Plans for New Library Call for H Shaped Building That Will Combine Utility and Pleasing Appearance

Excavation Will Begin at Once on New Structure.

Excavation for Iowa State's new $425,000 library building will begin immediately, under the direction of Tom Sloss, superintendent of buildings and grounds, it was announced this morning.

Plans for the new structure have been completed by Proudfoot, Bird & Rawson of Des Moines and call for an H shaped building of dignified and pleasing appearance. The new library will face the east and will be on a line with Central building.

The front part of the H will be used as a general reading room, the back part will be reserved for the staff and for offices and the middle portion for a museum room and for card index filing systems.

Aside from the main reading room, which will be 50x165 feet, there will be two science reading rooms about half as large. Other features which will be included in the new building will be a repair and binding room, a printing room and a rest room, the latter having a kitchenette in connection.

One of the unusual features of the library will be 40 cubicals, each of which will acommodate one student. These will be for the use of advanced and graduate students doing research work. Six seminar rooms with seating capacities of from 20 to 40 persons but which can be made into one large room when necessary, will be another accommodation to be incorporated.

The new building will house the library now in Central building and practically all of the books in the divisional libraries now scattered about the campus.

On the front of the building will appear the names of prominent scientists, in keeping with the spirit of the institution.

ters of a million dollars in ten days there last spring.

In addition to this work and the business of being manager of a branch of the American Bridge company, he has given without stint of his time and money for the Memorial Union, of which he is president. He has made two trips to the east coast, one to the Pacific states, many to Iowa and a tour around the state, paying all of his own expenses in addition to losing time as manager of a big business concern. Aside from this he has given over five thousand dollars, tho not a wealtthy man.

Now he is Ames to work until Christmas and from the first of the year until Commencement, without salary.

"I got something from Iowa State during the four years I spent here, from '79 to '83, and now I want to pay a small part of the interest on the debt I owe," as he says.

Where would one go to find a better example of loyalty?

A HARD CRACK AT SOMEONE

There was a crook that we'll not name,
Who boldly to this college came.
In shop he stole a half an hour;
They docked him three and he got sour.

He started out to beat himself
And logically landed on the shelf.
You'd think the dome of a college stude
That worked like that was made of wood.

For the jails are full of "short cut" men
Who try to steal, and get the pen.
For the worst paid man on this round ball
Is the gink who tries a crooked stall.

WHASSA MATTER, DOC, WERE THE TAMWORTHS TROUBLESOME?

When Dr. Murphy of the Vet department was late to class for the first time in ten years he gave the members three dollars and told them to spend it and have a good time. Nothing was said about keeping it quiet.

In the following example of poetic license, Weary Pete unloads himself of a terrible grudge against the fair coed What's the matter Pete, did someone jilt you?

Has the female of the species
Always ruled this land?
Has the hand that rocked the cradle,
Always been dictator to man?
It seems as tho it must have been,
Especially in Ames,
Where the aristocratic feminine
Rules with haughty disdain.

They make me very tired
With their plutocratic airs.
It is not good to call their bluff;
They'll snub you if you dare.
I'll admit I'm one of the pack
Who has catered to their whims;
But beginning now, about me they'll say,
You know, we couldn't keep him.
